Meaning

This work is the representation of what the mythical Thunderbird may have looked like. The name is: Heritage Thunderbird — “These Names are Mine!” It was sculpted to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the United States Air Force Thunderbirds.

The raptor’s in-flight attitude portrays a Thunderbird pilot as he rolls from altitude in a maneuver called a whifferdill toward a low pass over the air show line; his eyes fixed on show center.

His aggressive stance represents that he is the protector of the names in the binder over which he flies . . . the names of all who have been certified by their commander/leaders as Thunderbird alumni. As of the sculpture’s dedication, fewer than 1,800 names were held in this binder. This work is the permanent repository of Thunderbird names.

The Thunderbird sculpture represents the spirit of all who served on the Team and the collective strength of our members. While he is a representation of our past and present, one of his feathers remains incomplete; a symbol of the future and the unceasing quest for excellence.

The Work and the Artist

Rick Prazen, who describes himself as a blacksmith, lives in Salt Lake City where he owns a company that designs and makes custom chandeliers, railings, and art objects for homes and businesses. His passion is the sculpting of raptors.

Rick began with a frame made of steel rods, the heart of which is . . . a metal heart. Rick hand-cut each feather from sheets of A36 carbon steel; each precisely shaped and sized to match that of a bald eagle. He scored each feather with a hand grinder to give it texture. He spot welded the feathers to the frame and then colored each by the selective application of heat from a torch. As he did, the steel's color changed from natural metal to shades of yellow, brown, red, and then blue.

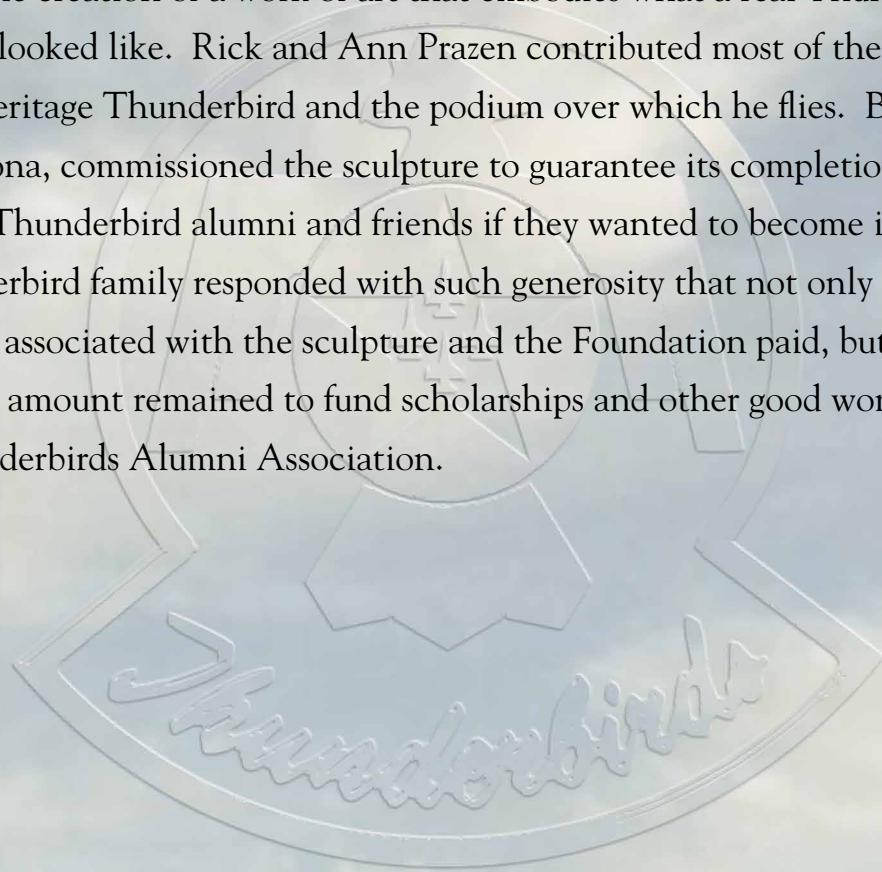

The combination of scoring and heating gives the sculpture a red, white, and blue luster thereby creating the colors of the Thunderbird mingled with the natural colors of an eagle. The final design element that makes Heritage Thunderbird — “These Names are Mine!” unique among all raptors is the addition of a feathered crest, similar to that of the crested eagle of Africa, to match the crest on the insignia of the USAF Thunderbirds. The talons are gold-plated and the eyes are cubic zirconium. Rick finished the work by spraying it with a protective coat of clear polyurethane.

History

Thunderbird alumnus Bob Gore (IO 74 - 76) was searching the Internet for the poem “High Flight” when he encountered Rick Prazen’s Web Site. Bob discovered that Rick was a Thunderbird fan and was the man who sculptured the gyrfalcon placed in Doolittle Hall at the Air Force Academy by the academy graduates.

Subsequent conversations and a fast-growing friendship between the two led to the creation of a work of art that embodies what a real Thunderbird might have looked like. Rick and Ann Prazen contributed most of the cost of sculpting Heritage Thunderbird and the podium over which he flies. Bob and his wife, Feona, commissioned the sculpture to guarantee its completion and then asked Thunderbird alumni and friends if they wanted to become involved. The Thunderbird family responded with such generosity that not only were all the costs associated with the sculpture and the Foundation paid, but a significant amount remained to fund scholarships and other good works of the Thunderbirds Alumni Association.

Heritage Thunderbird Falconers

One who cares for a raptor is called a falconer. Each who contributed to this sculpture's creation and its perpetual care is given the title Heritage Thunderbird Falconer. Their names follow in the order of the significance of their gift. The roll of Falconers closed forever on the date of the first execution of the Heritage Thunderbird Foundation's bylaws.
